

THE ROADMAP SCRIPT

The Roadmap Script is to be used after the Discovery Call Script after you've qualified your prospect as a good fit for your offer.

Before this call, you've already determined the prospect's goals, challenges, motivation, and know that they're serious about taking action.

The purpose of this call is to 1) break down your offer in more detail 2) make sure its a good fit and 3) work through any concerns or hesitations that might stand in the way, and 4) get your potential client to take action.

In this script we will go over step by step the process in which you will lead your client through the call.

For more information on this script, the psychology behind it, and to see how it is demonstrated refer to the Sales Module in the Personal Trainers Business Course.

Start the call by breaking the ice, and making small talk.

You: "Hey ____, so great to get connected! How's your day been going so far?"

Chat for a few minutes to get comfortable with each other, keep it short. 1-2 minutes tops.

Next acknowledge the previous rapport that was built from the discovery call and set the intention of the call.

You: "I just want to thank you for taking the time to hop on this call today. I had a really good feeling after we hopped off our last call and I'm excited to show you exactly how I can help you reach your goals!"

You: "What I have planned for this call is to recap what we talked about on our first call to see if there is anything I missed. Then, I would like to break down (Your Program) to show you exactly how I can help you reach your goals. And lastly go over what it would look like for us to work together. Does that sound good to you?"

You: "Awesome, let's get started!"

Before diving into the Current/Desired Situation part of the roadmap, first take a moment to work through any objections your potential client have. This allows you handle easy to solve objections early on, and will help you prepare for harder objections later in the call. Refer to the objection handling lesson in the course for a more detailed strategy.

You: “Before we dive in, is there any hesitations or concerns you have about getting started”

You: “Would there be anything that stopped you from taking action today?”

Now you will go into the Current/Desired Situation to recap their where they would like to be vs where they are now. You do this to make sure your prospect is heard, and for you to effectively communicate that your program will help them achieve their goals.

You can't sell your program as the solution to their problem if you don't know what their goals are.

This also builds deeper trust because they feel you understand their needs and desires.

Before diving into the program and how it works, you want to give them the opportunity to add in any details they may have forgotten to mention on the previous call.

Write down a clear vision of their goals and where they would like to be.

You: “Where do you see yourself in the next 90 days? What kind of transformation would be ideal for you? How do you want to feel? What results do you want to see?”

Use this opportunity to dive deep. Make sure to ask probing questions and get specifics.

If their goal is to lose weight, know how much weight they want to lose. If their goal is to get stronger, how much stronger would make them happy. Get very specific and create a goal with them that would make them feel satisfied if they were to achieve it.

Write down as many key points as you can so your prospect can see their goals in front of them.

Next, touch on their current situation.

You want to highlight the gap between where they are now and where they want to be.

Ask them what about their current situation isn't going right and what they'd like to change.

You: “And where exactly are you now compared to your goals? How do you feel right now? What do you want to change?”

Again, this is your opportunity to dive deep with your prospect and understand them. Ask probing questions to gain a complete picture and understanding about their situation.

Questions like:

Can you tell me more about that?

What did you mean by this?

How has this affected you?

What happens in X situation?

Etc. Any other sort of question that will probe out more information should be used here.

Now, dig deep into their why. Discover their motivation as to why they are looking to solve this problem and achieve their goals.

A good way to ask this is by asking “Why not stay the same”, this will prompt your prospect to talk about their needs to change.

You: “Why is it important for you to take action on these goals? Why not just stay the same?”

Again, go deep here. Ask probing questions to uncover the full picture as to what's motivating them.

Once you feel you understand their needs, wants, desires, challenges, and motivations it's time to recap for them.

You: “Just to make sure I’m following along, you would like to achieve XYZ (be specific as to what their goal is), your biggest challenge is ABC (be specific as to what their challenges are), and you are motivated to change because of 123. Did I get that right? Or is there anything else I might be missing?”

The final step you want to take here before moving forward is to get them to admit that they need your help and that they can't do it on their own.

You: “What’s stopping you from achieving this goal on your own?”

Listen for one of these before moving forward: Can't do it on their own, want results faster, want guidance from someone with experience.

When you feel you have the complete picture, move on to the next section of the call.

You: “Awesome, based on your current situation I can definitely help you reach your goals. What I’d like to do now is break down (Your Program) to show you our exact process to get you from (their current situation) to (their desired situation). Ready to dive in?”

In this section of the call you want to go over your main pillars and method for each (refer to your marketing message homework, your pillars and method will be congruent with your offer) and showcase how your pillars will help them achieve their goals.

For each pillar write down as many value items you can think of for your client and explain why each value item is important.

Your offer is going to be custom to your program and how it works. Below is an example of how to present your offer in a way that relates to your prospects goals. Your offer should be explained and structured around the same idea of breaking down your program, but may not be word for word.

You: “With (Your Program), we focus on 5 pillars of fitness. Nutrition, Training, Coaching, Education, and Community”

You: “For nutrition we focus on energy balance. Eating the right amounts of foods will help you make progress towards your goals. To do this we are going to teach you about macros, how to calculate them, how to track them, and how to adjust them. But dont worry, you wont do this all on your own. I will help you establish your macro baseline, and build you a custom meal plan to ensure we are in the correct spot.

You: “For training we will focus on progressive overload. I will build you a custom workout plan that you can follow. As you follow the workout plan I will teach you how to progress in the gym so you can see results and never get stuck in a plateau.”

You: “For coaching you and I will work closely together to monitor your progress and keep you accountable. We will have weekly check ins to review your progress and make adjustments. We will also have a weekly zoom call as needed. This way you stay committed to your goals, make consistent progress each week, and never lost or confused in your journey.”

You: “For education you will have access to our resources. These resources include XYZ guide, XYZ video course, and XYZ video library. With these resources you will learn _____, _____, _____. (list as many topics important and relevant to your client).”

You: “For community you will have access to our facebook group and group chat. Here youll be able to connect and meet like minded people on the same journey as you. This will help you stay accountable to your goals. In this group we will have a group coaching call every week to go over important topics and lessons on fitness.”

After you break down your pillars and method, its time for a temp check. Before you get carried away with shoving a firehouse of information down your potential clients throat. Give them a chance to catch up and work through any hesitation about what they’ve seen so far.

You: “How do you feel about what we’ve covered so far? Do you have any concerns or hesitation about this process? Is there anything missing you’d like to add?”

If they need express concern about the offer here, take some time to add in or clarify any information that might be confusing or out of alignment. Be willing to cater your offer to fit their needs/desires.

Next you will break down the deliverables of your program.

Your offer is going to be custom to your program and how it works. Below is an example of how to present your offer in a way that relates to your prospects goals. Your offer should be explained and structured around the same idea of breaking down your program, but may not be word for word.

You: “Now you know our process and how we can help you reach your goals, would you like to hear what it would look like for us to work together?”

You: “Perfect. (Your Program) is a 12 week program. You will have a weekly workout plan that will be tailored to your goals through trainerize. You will have weekly macros that assigned and tracked through Myfitnesspal or built into a meal plan. You will have weekly check ins to review your progress. You will have 24/7 support to reach out to me anytime. And you will have access to our facebook group and community for a lifetime.”

You: “And if you follow 100% of the plan, check in every week with photos on time, and dont see any results by the end of the 12 weeks, I’ll give you 100% of your money back”
optional

Before moving onto the price and investment portion of the presentation, you want to make sure there are no holes in your offer. Take a minute or two to allow the prospect to ask questions and for you to double check that the offer will fulfill their needs. This makes it difficult for the prospect to make an illegitimate objection.

You: “After hearing about the program, is there anything else you feel you might need in order for you to reach their goals? How do you feel about the program? Do you believe this program will help you reach your goals?”

If they have an actual concern or need they will say so here. And if they do have a concern or need you can address how you will handle it here. Once you address all their needs and fill all the holes you will say.

You: “Do you feel like this program will help you achieve your goals”

Lastly, ask for the sale. (this part is important, watch the Sales module in The Personal Trainers Business Course for more info).

You: “So to recap: you feel this program covers all of your needs and you believe this will help you achieve your goals. My final question is, do you want this?”

If they've made it into the call this far they will always say yes. Now it's time to present your payment options.

You: “Awesome, so let's go over the investment of the program.”

You: “The total value of (Your Program) is $997. We do have payment plan options available if you need.”

You: “Now that we've gone over everything, what are your thoughts? Where do you want to go from here?”

If they accept the offer and are ready to go, present your payment options.

You: “We take payment through (your payment processor). I can take your card number down when your ready?”

If they ask about a payment plan, choose a payment plan that will work best for the both of you. My personal favorite is month to month.

If they agree to the sale congratulations. This is what we call a lay-down sale. Proceed to onboarding your new client.

HANDLING OBJECTIONS

Though, most cases this is the point in the call where you will receive objections.

In order to handle objections, follow this objection handling script. (for more info on this and a video demonstration watch the Sales module in The Personal Trainers Business Course)

The most common objections you will get at this stage of the call are:

User: “I need to think about it”,

“I need to talk to my spouse”

“Now isnt a good time”

“I need to check my finances”

There will be more objections that you will find in the field. But these are the most common.

When facing an objection, the first step you want to take is to address and respect the objection.

You: “I understand you need time to think about it. It’s a big decision.”

Then deflect the objection. Most often objections are a smoke screen for uncertainty, meaning that they don’t believe their product will help them, or there is hesitancy in joining. They need more affirmation in order to feel more certain about your program.

If they are giving you an objection then they feel uncertain about either your program, you, the results, or the program might be too big of a commitment.

To first deflect this objection start by saying:

You: “If you don't mind me asking, do you like the program? Does it make sense to you?”

This will give your prospect the opportunity to speak out about the program. If there is something uncertain they feel about when it comes to the program they will mention it here.

Then you can address any concerns they might have about the program here giving them more information.

Ask for the sale again. During this sales call you may need to ask for the sale multiple times before the potential client says yes.

If they still don't budge ask this:

You: ““So let me ask you this, what concerns or hesitations do you have about getting started?”

Listen to their concerns and hesitations and see where you can offer a solution to help them overcome those objections.

Remember, objections are genuine concerns that your potential client has about the program. It is up to you as the coach to dig into what is holding your potential client back from taking action.

If the objection is about spouse, ask them if they need to speak their partner out of respect or for permission.

You: “I totally understand if you need to speak to your partner. Just curious, is it out of respect or permission?”

If your potential client says they need to talk to their spouse about respect then it means your potential client has the purchasing decision making power.

In this case ask if its okay for them to speak to their spouse then on the call or schedule a follow up for later that day.

If the objection is for permission then you will need to sell the partner as well. In this case its best to get the partner on the phone, or to send the recording of the sales call for their partner to watch.

In this case make sure to ask your prospect what questions or concerns their partner would have about the program.

You: “What questions or concerns does your partner have about getting started?”

Asking this question will prompt your prospect to express their hesitations which you will then be able to help them overcome.

Either way, for partner objections its best to handle those early on by asking them to speak to their partner beforehand.

The best way to solve a partner objection after the close is by getting them on the call to sell them as well, or by sending the recording. You cannot trust your prospect to sell your program to their partner as well as you can.

If the objection is “Now isn't a good time”

Simply recall back to earlier in the call when your client expressed why they need to take action now.

This will bring them back to why they hopped on the call in the first place.

You: “Earlier in the call you said that now is a good time because _____. Do you know longer feel that way? What changed your mind?”

Most of the time the objection is not actually “time”. Its nerves. So if their logic doesn't make sense here as they give an excuse as to why they can't take action, when earlier they expressed that now is the right time, you will need to hold them accountable.

You: “Is it okay if I'm brutally honest? Earlier on the call you said that now is the right time because _____. But now you're saying it isn't the right time because _____. Now we can overcome that by _____(give a solution to their time objection). So we both know time isn't the issue. What's really holding you back? Is it just nerves?”

You need to crack deep here to find the true reason holding them back. Once they express that they're just nervous or timid to take action you can empower them or offer some type of guarantee.

If the objection is financial, you need to uncover their financial situation.

You cannot know whether an objection is financial or not until you know exactly what they're working with.

The first step is to ask whether they have the resources available and need to think about it. Or if they don't have the resources and need to get access to them.

You: “I totally understand if you need to check your finances and think it over. May I ask you a question first? Do you have access to the resources and just need to think about it? Or do you not have access to the resources at all?”

If they have access to the resources ask them if there's anything else besides the finances holding them back.

What you want to do here is discover the true objection, whether it's actually the finances or something else.

If they express that they love the program and want to move forward but its just the finances holding them back, ask them to collaborate on a solution.

You: “Is it just the finances holding you back from getting started? Or is there something else you’re unsure of about the program.”

You: “If we can come up with a solution that makes sense for you financially would you be opposed to moving forward?”

If they agree to collaborate, you then have permission to create a custom payment plan for this client.

Here you’ll need to ask them how much they are willing to invest so that you can see exactly what resources they are working with.

The 3 pieces of information you need here are credit, cash on hand, and monthly income.

You: “I’d love to come up with a custom payment plan that would work for you. Is that okay? Awesome. First I’ll need to know how much credit you have available that you’re willing and able to invest?”

You: “Do you have any savings? If so, how much are you willing and able to invest?”

You: “Lastly, how much do you have monthly after expenses that you’re willing and able to invest?”

You: “Awesome, based on these numbers this is a payment plan we can do for you _____(offer custom payment plans that fit their situation).”

If your payment plan works for their budget, but they are still hesitant to get started then you will need to break through the nerves and hold them accountable.

You: “You said earlier that if we can up with a payment plan that works you would be willing to get started, but now there’s still hesitation. Whats actually holding you back?”

Dig into their real objection and offer a solution that will help them overcome it.

If they do not have access to resources and their financial situation shows that they cannot afford your program, then schedule a follow up date in the future to touch base.

If you get the sense that your potential client genuinely needs time to think about it, and you dont want to break rapport by pushing too hard, then schedule a follow up date for 72 hours from the call

Do not let them off the call without scheduling a follow up call and do not schedule a follow up call more than 3 days out.

People do not take 2 weeks to think about it. They will usually know within 24 hours.

Once you schedule them for a follow up on your calendar, thank them for their time.

You: “Thank you so much for chatting today, I’m looking forward to reconnecting at _____.”
